University of North Texas Project COPE- Helping Grandparent Caregivers

Project COPE (Caring for Others as a Positive Experience) is being conducted beginning later this Fall by Dr. Bert Hayslip at the University of North Texas. This project will compare different ways of helping grandmothers who are raising a grandchild between ages of 4 to 12 in the absence of the grandchild's birth parents. Grandmothers who are raising a grandchild older than 12 in the absence of the birth parent are also encouraged enroll in Project COPE. This study is funded by the National Institutes of Health and it involves four geographic locations: Northeast Ohio; the Greater Washington, DC – Baltimore, MD Metropolitan Area; Dallas/Fort Worth, Texas; and Southern California.

Participation in this study will involve attending 10 weekly group meetings with other grandmothers at a safe and convenient location in the community. Grandmothers will be assigned randomly to participate in one of 3 different programs that are designed to help grandmothers cope better with the role of raising a grandchild. A light meal will be served at each session and a supervised child care area for grandchildren will be available adjacent to the group meeting. Participants will also be asked to complete a total of six assessments over a two year period, where grandmothers will complete a brief interview and also complete a simple task with their grandchild that will be videotaped.

Grandparents who come to a study site in their community for this purpose will receive a $35 check after each assessment. At the end of the study, all participants will receive additional information about how to cope with raising a grandchild as well as information about parenting a grandchild. All information gathered from those who attend the study will be held in the strictest confidence.

Please call Dr. Hayslip at 940-565-2675 or email him at hayslipb@unt.edu to find out more about the study or to enroll.

January is Rotary Awareness Month
